To All Artists who have submitted work for possible inclusion in the Violence Transformed/Cambridge College “Sanctuary” exhibit:

We, as co-curators of the Sanctuary exhibit, can now give you another update on the status of this event. First of all, we hope that everyone is staying, safe, healthy and sane as we endure these unprecedented times. As you probably know, stay-at home restrictions in Massachusetts have been extended and no one, at present, is sure when things will eventually return to some semblance of normalcy. Therefore, we have no choice but to again suspend the curatorial process for the “Sanctuary” exhibit – with plans for reopening and extending the process as soon as we are able to do so.

Both Violence Transformed and Cambridge College are committed to co-hosting this exhibit as soon as feasible. We, and they, are hoping to be able to schedule the exhibit opening for some time in the Fall semester of 2020. When we are reasonably sure of when that might be, we will reopen the Call for Art and resume the curatorial process. As soon as we do, we'll let you know when that might be!

As we wait for more information about when Violence Transformed might be able to launch this and other on-site exhibits, we are looking into the possibility of creating online exhibit opportunities for Violence Transformed artists (including those of you we are contacting here). We will keep you posted. Keep checking the Violence Transformed website: www.violencetransformed.org

Best Regards,
